

ATCO INTRODUCES INNOVATIVE AIR PURIFICATION SOLUTIONS FOR INDIGENOUS COMMUNITIES

CALGARY, Alberta – ATCO Sustainable Communities (ATCO) announced today that it has partnered with Environmental Air Cleaning Ltd. to become the exclusive distributor of Odorox™ air purification systems to Indigenous communities across Canada.

The air purification systems employ patented mould, smoke and odour eliminating equipment used to improve indoor air-quality in commercial, industrial, institutional and agricultural facilities, as well as in disaster restoration.

“We are excited to offer this new technology as part of our efforts to become the preferred full-service builder for Canada’s Indigenous communities,” said Boris Rassin, President, ATCO Sustainable Communities. “Facilities that are subject to external factors such as recurring flooding and fires that result in indoor air-quality problems could benefit tremendously from these systems.”

The systems use green, non-chemical technology to neutralize difficult odours, harmful bacteria and other volatile organic compounds. ATCO will offer these products as an option on new projects, as well as for renovations to existing community facilities.

ATCO Sustainable Communities combines modern construction technologies with ATCO’s long history of forming successful Indigenous partnerships to build facilities that reflect a community’s cultural values while offering shorter timelines and reduced costs. By offering a design-build solution, the company can economically provide any facility a community may need, ranging from offices, schools and daycare centres to residential housing, hockey arenas and gas stations.
